Herman Kugelman, nineteen years old, tepson of City Judge John Henry Mc-Carthy, has grown tired of his three weeks' bride, who was Miss Florence Fee, daughter of J. C. Fee, of No. 253 fled from New York.

This latest development in the youthul matrimonial venture-vouthful so far as Kugelman is concerned, as his bride is several years his senior—is surprising after his declaration of undying love nade three weeks ago in Harlem Court before Magistrate Zeller, before whom is mother had summoned him and Mrs. McCarthy had gone to the Fee home

When the matter came up in court next day the boy's mother, who thought she would be able to lead him home without the slightest difficulty, was horrifled to hear her hopeful tell the Mag-istrate that he was married.

"This lady," he said, indicating the former Miss Fee, "is my wife. I love her with the deepest devotion. We were married to-day and I shall never leave her. There was no fraud practised. knew what I was doing and we both knew what we were doing when we went to the church and had the ceremony performed." The Court refused to interfere.

"No more are you a son of mine," said Mrs. McCarthy, as her offspring swung past her. "You're cut off, and never come near my home again. You have made your bed; now lie in it." made your bed; now lie in it."
That was three weeks ago. Mothers' hearts have softened in less time and the most ardent passions have grown chilly. Mrs. McCarthy is no exception to the general rule of mothers, and when Herman came knocking at her front door and asked to be taken back, declaring, it is said, that he knew he had done wrong, Mrs. McCarthy took him in.

Mrs. Kugelman, nee Fee, was a dear friend of Miss Maud Lindgren, some times known as Miss Maud Wayne, who, on May il, took a flying trip to Boston, with Frank Torres, a district mossenger boy, for an escort. She announced upon her return that she had gone to the Hub to meet her fiance, an officer on the U. S. S. Olympia. She tame as she went, but such publicity attended her movements that Mrs. Fee, with whom she was boarding, said that she would have to get out of the house and since then no more has been heard of Miss Lindgren or Wayne.

Mrs. McCarthy, when seen at her home, No. 137 West One Hundred and Twentleth street, to-day, denied emphatically that she had attempted to influence her son to leave his wife.

"He came here on Tuesday," said Mrs. McCarthy, "and begged to see me. When he had refused to listen to our advice in the court-room we washed our hands of him. But he hung around the house until I was finally persuaded to let him in.

McCarthy had gone to the Fee home and demanded the deliverance of her dear boy. Miss Fee and the young hopeful, she said, had stood in a window and laughed at her.

Then the mother bethought herself of the law, but the summons she caused to be issued sounded a note of warning to the couple that they lost no time in obeying. They hurrled to the Rev. Wills T. Odell, pastor of the Calvary Methodist Church, One Hundred and the tenants to get in. He visited every floor and got a load from each, making in all seven trips. The last was to carry down two women who had fainted. In the excitement of the first few minutes the six-year-old son of the superintendent, who had been playing in the court, was missing. When the ilremen arrived they were told he was still in the place. Several rushed in the stifling smoke and made a search for the boy who was then out on the street with the crowd.

The fire was stopped at the first floor and the damage to the floors above was caused by smoke.
